SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — As he stood by the room he shared with teammate Russell Wilson before they finished a practice last week, Jameis Winston watched on from the sidelines as the winningest quarterback in Florida State history, Bobby Bowden, shook hands with Bob Stoops. Winston, the 21-year-old Heisman Trophy winner, did not like the surprise visit that Friday afternoon. Bowden and quarterback coach Tim Brewster, however, did. Before Winston and his teammates had even worked out that day, Bowden called Stoops to tell him about the conversation he had with him. “He wanted to let me know,” Winston said of Bowden’s conversation with Stoops. “So I said, ‘Well, coach, did you read the paper?’ “He said, ‘No, I haven’t. Let me talk to coach.’ And then he did. Then, coach said, ‘Jameis, you’re going to Florida.’ ” This is the first Winston has heard of the university president’s decision to void his scholarship for 2015 after an investigation revealed that he had sent pictures of a woman’s breasts to his friend and former FSU teammate, former offensive coordinator Jameis Frazier. Winston had tried to silence Frazier, so he did not inform the school of the allegations until Frazier told him after the 2013 season. We are very proud of him. I am ashamed of what he has been accused of.” Bowden said Winston will remain enrolled at Florida State, not for a scholarship in 2015, but for an internship that will not count

Help me to tell you why this thing is needed. I had a problem with creating a new, massive bookmark collection. I liked some interesting link (which I didn't bookmark), so I wanted to preserve the link. The problem is that after sometime, I was even unable to understand the bookmarks file in Firefox, as it was just a huge mess. Next, I came out of Firefox and tried with Google Chrome, which I use in laptop. And guess what, when I went to bookmarks page in Chrome, it showed me nothing. My immediate reaction was to synchronize Google Chrome bookmarks with Safari bookmark manager. And all those huge bookmarks, with pages they contained, even the bookmarklets and passwords became stored in a reasonable, friendly format. It was a one-time, never-to-be-re-installed fact. I needed a better solution. Like a "sync" option for Firefox and Chrome. And then I just happened to look into Lunarmark project, which I find very useful in such case. Lunarmark simply allows to take advantage of a bookmark manager (be it any browser, like Firefox, Opera, Chrome or any other) and saves its bookmarks into the underlying, unified bookmark storage, whatever it may be. The unified storage can be Postgres, SQLite, Windows registry or Exchange, just to name a few. One feature it offers, which I found very useful, is the ability to add synced bookmarklets and passwords. While posting this review, I got a notification that I failed to login. I thought it was due to my new internet provider, but after logging in again, I found out that the problem was with the credit card I used to register with Lunarmark. In fact, the credit card is the activation code. I guess, I needed to use a credit card for the first time to activate Lunarmark. After that I was able to use the application without the credit card. Which would have been otherwise impossible, as the first time I login, I was sent to a page asking me to enter my credit card number and I didn't have it. In summary, Lunarmark is all about convenience. It enables you to take advantage of a browser bookmark manager, having an easy way to access the same set of bookmarks even in multiple browsers. the conductance-frequency curves are not very sensitive to the temperature  $T=0.2$  K, which is an evidence for the insulating nature of the superconductor. This statement is further supported by the plot of the resistance-temperature dependence, see the inset of Fig. [Fig3]. The resistivity data are roughly two orders of magnitude smaller than the normal-state resistance. Moreover, similar to the behavior of the [*clean*]{} junctions, the parallel resistance in the Andreev regime , Figs. [Fig2,(b)] remains nonzero and is smaller than the normal-state resistance. To demonstrate that the observed dips in the conductance-frequency curves are induced by the superconductor, we plot in Fig. [Fig4] the current-bias dependence of the differential conductance of the superconducting junction with  $N_1=0.86$  and  $N_2=0.78$ , measured at  $T=0.2$  K, in the presence and absence of a magnetic field  $B$ .
